Pieter Cremer Pieter Cremer (16 October 1811 – 20 March 1886) was a Dutch architect and furniture designer who was one of the first to establish a style of furniture based on the usage of wood in the traditional Dutch architectural style. Biography Pieter Cremer was born in Alkmaar, Netherlands in 1811. He studied at the Royal Academy of Fine Arts in Amsterdam from 1833 to 1839, where his teachers were Jacob Maris and Samuel van Vereenigde. In 1838, he received the commission to design the Minnewater Palace in Alkmaar. He later became a teacher at the academy, as well as a cabinet-maker. He opened his own shop, the Alkmaardsche Werktuigfabriek, in 1841. Cremer's work in the 1840s saw him employing traditional materials and design to produce chairs, desks and sideboards with a solid plank construction. Although he never intended to have his work copied, it quickly was imitated by other makers, including Herman Kolff in Utrecht and Willem Beeters in Haarlem. The style developed as both houses of parliament, the Raad van State and the House of Representatives, received substantial furniture in the 1840s. In addition to architectural projects, Cremer worked on furniture design, winning the following prizes: Stedelijk Landb 82157476af
